speed and was at the north end of the platform when a man who had been walking from one end of the station to the other suddenly dived forward and landed with his body across the rail. Sexton had to act quickly, but when wheels of his first car reached the man the train was almost halted. The man was pushed along for a few feet and then jammed to one side of the Passengers came rushing from the cars, and several lifted the man to the "I'm not much hurt," he said. "I only wish I were. I am out of work and have been out since last summer. I haven't money and I haven't friends. I am sick all when things come like this?" To the police the man said he was Frank Reid, forty-five years old, now living at Mills Hotel No. 2, at No. 160 "I'm a widower." he told the police "but I have a son who is about seventeen years old. He is named after me, but where he is now I can't tell. You will have to ask the authorities of St. Phillip's Home what has become of him. He was sent there when he was a little fellow. I haven't seen him since. I am a waiter, but was willing to do anything to earn a living. 'A man without work is better dead."

In spite of Reid's protestations that he wasn't much injured, the doctors at St. Vincent's Hospital found he was He was held a prisoner
